Then $P LMP A P BCP D PBCP PM LP P LMP$, so that PP belong to the involution determined by the pairs LL, MM . This is a projective property, and is therefore true of the range cut out on a transversal by the sides of a quadrangle and any conic through the four vertices; hence all such conics cut the transversal in pairs of conjugate points of the same involution determined by the pairs of opposite sides. But these pairs of sides are themselves particular, degenerate cases of conics through the four points, so the theorem can be stated in the simple and general form: Conies through four fixed points cut any transversal in involution. Hence if five points $ABODE$ on a conic are given, the other point of intersection X of any straight line EX through one of the...
