Wesley records, as we have seen, a remarkable revival of religion in Shoreham, produced by the labors of one of them. She had the charge of his family for some years, and was the companion and solace of his old age, but was snatched suddenly from him by death. The venerable man, when Evangelical Magazine, 1859. London. 1 Contemporary books often speak of the peculiar impression produced by the appearance of this holy man. An example is recorded by a living Methodist preacher as occurring in his early travels in the remote wilds of Louisiana. On his circuit he found a settler who had been reprovod by Fletcher at Madeley for profanity; he was struck dumb by the look of the vicar, and though he afterward went to sea, forgot the words of the rebuke, and was recklessly wicked, that look never...
