Excerpt: .are negligible, but in belt wheels they must be carefully considered. The cylinder must be thoroughly cleaned in the ports.Steam and exhaust chests and bore are blown out with steam or air. All core sand left in the casting or grit blown into it in transportation or erecting must be removed. The throttle valve should be put on, making the engine ready for the pipe connections to the boilers. The piston, rod and crosshead should be put in and lined up. The guide should have marks at each end to indicate the length of the stroke and the clearances in the cylinder by bringing a mark on the crosshead line on line with them, as in Fig. 184. This must be verified by moving crosshead and piston from one end to the other until the piston strikes the heads. If the piston rod has...
