L. - Charles smoking in doorway, R. Enter, Polly, C. E. Polly, (coming down) Jessie, I met a soldier on my way from school, such a fine manly fellow, and such a pretty uniform. Oh! you should have seen him: he reminded me of dear old Jack. I wonder if we shall ever see him again? Jessie. He is expected here this evening. Polly. This is glorious news; why didn't you tell me before? One would think that you are sorry that he is coming. Jessie. I am neither sorry nor pleased, his coming does not interest me. Polly. Jessie, how strangely you speak, you ought to be proud to meet an old friend. I am sure he will be glad to see you. Jessie. I am not so sure of that, you seem to forget - Polly. There,...
