Excerpt: . . . 11 else puts out F through G on that same set of subjects, they get furious, insist that it is a leak, and refer it to the Justice Department for prosecution and investigation. Now, you almost never find the leaker, but if you did, one could imagine a very difficult set of circumstances that prosecutors would face in trying to prove where the administration had chosen to draw the line between things that they were comfortable being talked about and things they were uncomfortable being talked about. So the question, I think, goes back to, as you alluded to in your opening remarks, about who - as did Senator Kyl - who decides what harm will result. That is principally a governmental function, and it is a very difficult line to draw. Chairman C. Well, I think it just raises the issue of whether we can deal with the espionage statute in isolation. CIPA and the whistleblower and the other related statutes that we have that are aimed at establishing practices that, when you leak information, you are violating those practices. MITH Mr. S. I completely agree, Mr. Chairman. If I was not clear, they are linked. There are a number of statutes that fit together, and one ought to look at them comprehensively. Chairman C. Is there a difference here in regard to those ARDIN who sign a non-disclosure agreement with the Government and those individuals who do not sign a non-disclosure Does that present a different hurdle in regard to current espionage laws or related statutes Anybody care to - - LADECK Mr. V. I...
