The SAFFRON FINCH (Sycalis flaveola) is the only representative of its genus well known in this country. It is very canary-like, greenish-yellow above, streaked with blackish. The forehead is bright orange and the underparts are yellow. The female is somewhat duller than the male, but otherwise is similar. The Saffron Finch is now being imported from northern South America in some numbers. It is very easily kept, and breeds readily in an aviary. It is not a safe companion, however, for species smaller than itself. The GRASSQUITS (Tiaris) are tiny birds, found chiefly, though not exclusively, in the West Indies. The most familiar species is the MELODIOUS GRASSQUIT (T. canora), of Cuba, known in England as the Cuban Finch, and among American dealers by the native name Tomogina. The male is green above, with the head, throat and chest black. A broad crescent of bright yellow passes across the throat, from eye to eye. The female has the black on the throat replaced by chestnut, and the yellow collar is less distinct and the breast is gray. The YELLOW-FACED GRASSQUIT (T. olivacea), also of Cuba, is similar to the preceding species, but lacks the yellow crescent, this color being confined to a streak through the eye and a patch on the throat. The Mexican form (T. o. pusilla) is distinguished by the extension of the black from the chest over the abdomen. When first imported, the...
